The American Motion Picture Society

From the President

He last time I spoke to Howard Lewis was about three years ago. He asked if I would be the vice president of the American Motion Picture Society the following year. The job would be mostly just a figure head. Sure! Why not! George Cushman had just died, but Howard had the whole shubang running smoothly. After a year of twiddling my thumbs, doing nothing in the job, I suddenly realized that the VP became the president the next year. Not to worry. Howard still had everything under control. Howard became ill, and after several bouts will illness, he too passed along to that big soundstage in the sky. AMPS stalled.

Roger Garretson then picked up the gauntlet as Secretary/Treasurer, taking Howard's place. Matt Jenkins took over editorship of the AMPS Movie Makers publication and I tagged along for the ride as President. It was Roger's feeling that we should not let AMPS and the American International Film and Video fesitval be written off as "finis." After all the Festival has survived for 68 years and is the longest running film festival in the United States. This struck a responsive cord in my heart since my own construction company was in the throes of death, having been established by my father in 1938. I hate to see any organization die after that many years of providing service and/or lively hood for so many people for such a long time. While AMPS is not an organization in the same sense as the construction company, it has been a place where "wannabe" movie moguls could send their productions to be aired and hopefully be enjoyed and appreciated by others who have similar interests.

AMPS is not out of the woods yet. But it is still alive for now. It is still dedicated to the interests of the serious (and not so serious) motion Picture makers. However, the organization cannot exist without members. AMPS is you. It is me. It takes each one of us to make up the Society. Without the collective "us" AMPS will die. We are AMPS. Do we want it to pass on with George and Howard or do we want to leave it for others to have a place to express and show their talents?

I propose we, number 1, make sure our own membership is renewed. Number 2, recruit your movie maker friends, entice them with the GREAT prizes the Festival gives to winners. Number 3, let us know if you would like to be a board member. Remember the pay and benefits are great. Yachts, hula girls, vacations, etc. That last sentence has nothing to do with pay. Those are things you can use to make your movies around. Your Pay? Appreciation!!! I once worked for a franchise company for ten years. To this day I feel cheated because the boss did not give me a 10 year appreciation pin as he had given to others. He could not admit it was just an over sight on his part. Had he done so, perhaps I would have worked for him forever. I think I rustrated, that's what I am. I am beginning to shoot a documentary about a sculpture I am building. I sat down with a theater set designer to draw up a list of materials with which to build this masterpiece. Unfortunately, I can't seem to locate all the materials the designer recommended. And when I originally planned out the production, I thought that I would be ready to shoot by now. But it isn't shaping up that way. Also, I usually get apprehensive just prior to beginning production. All those "What if ...?" questions arise. Sometimes it takes the mantra "This isn't brain surgery," to get me into the production stage. However, after the initial bumps are passed, and the worries subside, I remember why I keep on producing new projects, because I LOVE MAK-ING MOVIES!

In this issue, you will find the first of a series of articles on judging motion pictures. This series is a reprint of the articles which originally appeared in "Movie Makers" in the early 1990's. These articles, by George Cushman, are terrific and deserve a second look.

Does AMPS need a web page? I think so. Not only to attract new members, but we can use the page to serve as a beacon for amateur and low budget motion picture makers. We could have a question and answer section, our festival listing. and perhaps even a place where we can describe and distribute our "epics" to others. While I can't step forward and offer to create the web page, I am willing to ask my University to see if they are agreeable to providing space on our server with which to contain the page. If there is interest in having a web page, I will pursue a formal request. Of course. I would be agreeable to periodically updating the page. Is there anyone out there willing to create the page for us?

Being part of the longest running film/video festival in the United States is impressive. My second suggestion is, lets make a documentary about AMPS and its members. Lets talk about our history and profile our members. While this is still just a vague idea that I am tossing out to the membership, I am interested in hearing from you on how we could produce it.

Also, could we produce a brochure to give out or send to prospective members? I just finished a four color tri-fold which our radio/ television concentration will use to provide information to prospective students. It was easy to make, as I made it in Microsoft Publisher. While I am not pushing Microsoft publisher, there are lots of programs, even Corel Word Perfect can create brochures. Anybody out there interested?

Also, please renew your membership if it is up for renewal.

speak for all, AMPS IS APPRECI-ATED. Each and everyone of you. Roger Garretson as Secretary/Treasurer, Matt Jenkins as Editor, Pete Crombie in Illinois, and Jack Rudell in Ontario as board members, Margaret Chamberlain in Victoria as the Canadian representative, and Terry Mendoza in England as the United Kingdom representative. ALL ARE APPRECIATED. Yes, and perhaps even myself.

Thanks,

Ernest.

When in Doubt, Leave It Out!

hear this type of statement all the time: "Oh, if you use some one else's video clip, as along as its less than six seconds long, its considered fair use." Not in my book!

I am producing a documentary in which I want to quote statements that were published in various periodicals. I wrote to each publisher asking for permission. The responses ranged from: "You have a one time permission," to: "You must pay $20.00 per quote and must ask permission in writing prior to each showing of the documentary."

The copyright was established to encourage creativity and to provide the artist with protection and control over the work. The same copyright laws that require me to seek permission to use someone else's work, protects my own work.

If you plan to use photographs, music, quotations from books or magazines, video or film clips, or anything that was produced by someone else, you better get formal permission from the copyright holder. Especially if there is even the slightest chance that your project will be seen by a large group of people, will receive an award in a festival, or be seen on television. This sounds like a lot of work, and sometimes it is a lot of work. In my experience, about 50 percent of the time, the copyright holder will grant you permission without any fees or strings attached. Be sure the copyright holder grants you permission IN WRITING. Other wise the permission is useless.

In reading festival entry forms, most say that by signing the form you are stating that you have all clearances for your motion picture. This means you have written permission for all the stuff in your production that you didn't create.

Where else can you get music?
Look in the back of such magazines as "Videomaker." There are lots of companies that sell buy out music.
This means you pay a one time fee and then can use the music in any of your productions. Often you can call these companies and they will play examples over the telephone.

OR...when in doubt, leave it out!!

It's Only A Ball Game

No 1, July, 1991

eteran movie makers, both video and film, will tell you that entering your work in a competition is like a ball game. You win a few, you lose a few. No one wins all the time, even with the same prize winning picture. Babe Ruth, the legendary Home Run King, struck out far more times than he homered the ball over the fence.

Beginners who enter competitions soon learn that winning in one festival is no guarantee that such "luck" will continue. And to a large degree winning consistently IS luck.

Festivals try to get competent judges but good judges are rare. Ideal judges are objective, but far too many of them allow their preferences, their likes, their dislikes to influence their judgement. Even though a picture may be well made, if the judge does not like the subject matter, he often finds it hard to cast his vote in favor.

Occasionally, a festival of amateur pictures will make the mistake of inviting professionals to serve on the judging panel. This is seldom wise because unless a judge was once an amateur himself and has had wide experience in the field of making pictures at the amateur level, it is very doubtful that he would be suitable for evaluating amateur work. A professional who never was an amateur seldom understands the amateur's problems and limitations and often has little or no sympathy for amateur efforts.

Pictures should be entered in a series of festivals and competitions to ascertain how well the work fares. If it wins consistently it has bucked the odds. But no picture, like a ball team, wins all the time the judges being what they are.

If the entrant will recognize and accept this, he will not become discouraged when told his picture did not win. Consistent losing means a poor picture and it should be re-worked, but the best picture ever made won't win every time. You win a few, you lose a few. That's the game we play.

George Cushman

It Takes a Two-by -Four

e are all familiar with the old story of the farmer, who before even picking up the reins, hit his mule across the head with a two-by-four, ostensibly to get his attention.

We, as movie makers, also should let our audience have a two-by-four between the horns (cinematically speaking, of course,) if our films are to rate more plaudits than yawns.

Specifically, I am referring to the way we choose to start our films. The opening sequence can make or break a film. The filmer can lose his audience with a weak opening sequence and be unable to recapture it even with excellent footage,

The movie maker should strive for an opening that will "grab" the audience, get their attention, and put them on the edge of the seat, anxious to see what is to follow.

There are several elements that can be used individually or in combination with each other, that will help achieve immediate audience response to a movie.

- 1. Surprise.
- 2. Color
- 3. Unusual Angle
- 4. Action.

The SURPRISE opening should be use judiciously Care should be exercised that surprise is not used for its own sake. If it is not relevant to the story it will tend to confuse or annoy the viewer.

Striking COLORS and unusual SHAPES or combinations of both, tend to grab audience interest immediately.

Here again, they should be kept relevant to the story.

The unusual ANGLE or VIEW POINT open endless possibilities for attention grabbing opening scenes.

Experimenting while shooting can give a variety to choose from, come editing time. Of course ACTION is what movies are all about. Too many filmers, forget that "movies should move," and don't maintain their AQ (Action Quotient,) either in the opening or subsequent scenes. Consequently, the audience does not enjoy the film as much as they should.

So... filmers, as you gather footage for your next epic, look for the scene with the extra dramatic punch that can be used to belt your audience right between the eyes the instant the image hits the screen. Get off to a roaring start and the battle is half won.

2. Mass deper recorded image mass or size.
3. Light and day and shadows.
4. Form (three consideration)

But beware! The fact that you have a terrific beginning is no reason to relax your efforts on the rest of the film. It is disappointing to an audience fired up by a wild beginning and have the story droop after the opening salvo.

So movie makers, whether you use SURPRISE, COLOR, VIEWPOINT, or ACTION, as a grabber is not important, what is important is that you do remember the "two-by-four"... audiences are a lot like mules!

Stan Whitsitt

is reproduced from an "Art Appreciation Class" syllabus. It caught my attention as I thought how Elements of Art and Principles of Art depict the essence of what we attempt to apply and manipulate when we make a movie.

Is Movie Making an Art? It certainly is an art; and, the more expertly we apply the elements and follow the principles, the better and more significant will be our movies. The six elements depicted on page 6 are in a sense the elements that make up the visual image.

- 1. Lines of all shapes and sizes are recorded with fidelity or fuzziness according to recording quality.
- 2. Mass depends on how ell the recorded image conveys the feeling of mass or size.
- 3. Light and dark deals with lighting and shadows.
- 4. Form (three dimensions) requires a consideration of perspective.
- 5. Texture is an important consideration as the recorded image often fails to depict faithfully certain textures. In fact the video image often distorts, or causes certain textures to flicker.
- 6. Color is not depicted on the following black and white page but it is certainly one of the most important elements in movie making. Faithful reproduction is difficult to achieve and it depends heavily on lighting, the recording system, and the skill of the cameraman. Even black and white or monotone movies can be skillfully filmed to give an impression of color.

Sound is not mentioned in this example of art as it deals with visual art. Sound and especially music is an art and is essential to a well made movie unless you still like the old silent movies. The six principles of art depicted on the following page are self explanatory. The aesthetic quality of our movies depends largely on how well we observe these principles. We need to follow these principles to make more appealing and significant movies.

Jim Beach

WHAT IS ART?

rt is defined in many ways. Webster's encyclopedic unabridged dictionary has eighteen ways of defining art.

I like this one - 1. The quality, production, or expression, according to aesthetic principles of what is beautiful, appealing, or of more than ordinary significance.
